The Westbank Annual Duck Convention

From the Kitchen Nook: Vegetable Quinoa Soup by Rita Pedersen

Ingredients: * 2 tsp (10 mL) olive oil * 1 onion, diced * 2 cloves garlic, minced * 1 cup (250 mL) thinly sliced cremini mushrooms, (about 115 g) * 1 sweet potato, (about 340 g) peeled and diced * 2 cups (500 mL) homemade vegetable broth, or organic vegetable broth * 1/2 cup (125 mL) quinoa * 1/2 tsp (2 mL) pepper * 1/4 tsp (1 mL) salt * 2 cups (500 mL) stemmed kale, thinly sliced * 1 tbsp (15 mL) red wine vinegar. Preparation: In large saucepan, heat oil over medium heat; cook onion and garlic, stirring occasionally, until softened, about 5 minutes. Add mushrooms; cook, stirring occasionally, until beginning to soften, about 4 minutes. Stir in sweet potato, 3 cups water, broth, quinoa, pepper and salt; bring to boil. Reduce heat to medium; cook until quinoa is tender, 10 to 12 minutes. Stir in kale; cook until tender, about 4 minutes. Stir in vinegar.

Three Mile House...An Encounter on Twisty Bear Creek Road in Westbank by Gordon H. Ficke. Pictured left, Sour Cherry Orchard on Bear Creek Road

Turning sharp left from Parkinson Road onto Bear Creek Road, and almost immediately, the housing subdivisions disappear from sight as my black car meanders down the narrow twisty two-lane blacktop through the silent unspoiled wilderness. The road winds northward and I get the occasional glimpse of Okanagan Lake peeking through the trees on my right, revealing the natural beauty of this area.

Further along this lonesome road and as I round a left-hand curve all of a sudden there appearing before me on the right is a sweeping tract of hundreds of leafless grey sour cherry trees. An orchard in the middle of a wilderness setting is definitely out of place. What happened here to demolish this entrepreneur's dream? The car climbs the moderate grade and the road veers 90 degrees to the right. Just off the road to the left are the remains of what was once a log building. The roof had long ago collapsed in on itself. The weathered log walls lean inwards. Even in this precarious state, this prominent structure, whether a house or barn exudes an enduring character. If it could talk, it would have an interesting story to tell. "That building was referred to as the 'Three Mile House'. There is so much history associated with that building," Irene (named after her mother) Wiberg (formerly Petterson) revealed. Irene grew up near that log building, in the Bear Creek area of Westbank. Her dad John Petterson, born in 1907 in Sweden, moved to Canada in his late teens and could not speak a word of English. Petterson hung around with other Swedes that came to Canada and he found it very difficult to converse with other Canadians. John was a logger all his life and later moved from the prairies to the Okanagan to initially work for Irene's grandparents, Gardo and Marie Getts, who owned a large tract of land near that log house. John met the Getts's daughter and future wife, Irene, when she was only 16. The couple were later married in 1937 and boarded with her parents for a short time. "Dad drove logging trucks, first for one of the Garraway brothers in Peachland and then for S.M. Simpson's sawmill in Kelowna. Then in the early 1950s he bought his own logging truck, a Diamond T, that he was very proud of," Wiberg effused. "That log building was used as a barn, a house, and then a barn again," Wiberg recalled. "I remember that the McLean family lived in that house when I was in elementary school. They cleaned up the building to live in it. The couple had two boys and a daughter. I think Tina was the daughter's name. Upstairs there was a loft to store hay, when the building was used as a barn." There were a number of squatters that lived in the area during the 1930s through to the 1960s. There were several older gentlemen that lived near Bear Creek. "Mr. Sutherland was a big burly man who had formerly served in the army, then there was Henry Bone, who always wore a hat, I remember. There was a very small fellow, named Jerry Prior and he was such a nice gentleman, and he was very interesting," Irene remembered. "These people were like little hobos and packrats," Wiberg chuckled. "When these people left their shacks, other men would move in to take up their residences." The only chap that Irene remembered quite well was Henry Locke. "He was the clean little man that moved in and tidied up those houses, and then for one reason or another, they would just leave! Mr. Locke occupied a house that was right beside Bear Creek, near to where the weigh scales were." Locke helped Irene's father, John, construct their water pipe to their house from John's spring above their property. The remnant of that water line still exists today.

"In 1950 my dad, Archie Currie sold the Westbank Garage (where the Petrocan Service Station is today on the corner of Old Okanagan Highway and Main Street in Westbank)," Marjorie Milroy declared. Marjorie is the eldest daughter of Archie and Luella Currie's five children. After coming back from a two month prairie vacation, Archie and Luella bought the 380-acre property that included the sour cherry orchard, from Maurice Chaplin. The family moved in to Gardo and Marie Getts' former home. They lived in that house for around two years. "We had hayfields, five cows and five heifer calves on the part of the property where that sour cherry orchard is now," Milroy remembered. "There were two acres of apple trees, one or two cherry trees, one of them a Royal Anne variety that my mother and I picked and she made them into maraschino cherries. We also grew a vegetable garden on that piece of land." To this day there is an old cabin next to a big tree on the orchard property. "The logger that built that cabin on the Petterson property owed my dad some money, and in lieu of payment, my dad hauled the cabin down on the deck of his truck and set it on the concrete foundation of the former house that had been built there. That house had burned to the ground during the 1930s. Rumour has it that the fire was deliberately set to collect the insurance. I was thirteen at the time and my sister Callie was 12," Marjorie explained. "Our job was to move the 3" x 40' pipes with sprinklers, Callie at one end and I at the other, and we moved miles of those pipes to keep our hayfield irrigated." I was like my dad's hired hand," Marjorie cajoled. "I had to ride the range and chase the cows up to the bald range every third or fourth day. The cows would winter in the hayfield near the shed we kept the hay in. Every day the cows would wander down the Bear Creek for a drink. When we were living in the area, someone was using the Three Mile House to house their chickens," Marjorie remembered. Ferne Jean (nee Gellatly) would truck their cattle to the range during the early to mid 1960s. "I hated driving that truck on that narrow, windy Bear Creek Road," Ferne admitted. She passed Three Mile House many times and commented, "I thought that the Three Mile House would be a perfect building to be included with the log buildings at Gellatly Heritage Park!" However, it would be a mammoth task to have it moved there from Bear Creek Road!
